

WOMAN IN JAIL ON BAD CHECK CHARGE; GIVEN THREE MONTHS

Mrs. Mary L. Hartman Sentenced by Judge Keller

DENIES ANY DEFRAUD

Judge Declares Her Not Guilty of Charge to Defraud Inn-Keeper

DOYLESTOWN, June 21.—Mary L. Hartman, alias May Ella Lee, was sentenced Monday to serve three months in the Bucks County Prison by Judge Hiram H. Keller on a charge of uttering a worthless check for $13. The defendant, formerly on the broadcasting string of a well-known hook-up, pleaded guilty to issuing the check to Mrs. Bertha Haven, proprietor of the Washington Crossing Inn.

On a charge of defrauding an inn-keeper of a check of $205, the defendant entered a plea of nolle-contendere and Judge Keller adjudged her not guilty.

Mrs. Lee, who for some time sang over the radio when she lived at St. Davids on the Main Line, was arrested after she had defrauded Mrs. Haven, witnesses testified.

Mrs. Haven testified that she was introduced to Mrs. Lee by very reputable Trenton people, and that after she had gained her friendship, she asked continuously on various visits to Washington Crossing Inn, for Mrs. Haven to cash a check.

On one occasion Mrs. Haven cashed a check for $205, a check that was dated two days ahead. According to Mrs. Haven the loan was made to Mrs. Lee for the purpose of buying in some bonds. The check was returned from a Philadelphia bank "no funds" and Mrs. Haven reported to the authorities.

At the hearing, John L. DuBois, of Doylestown, representing Mrs. Lee, argued to the court that Mrs. Lee had been the creature of circumstances. She was formerly a member of the staff of a Philadelphia newspaper with whom she had a broadcasting contract. She has been estranged from her husband, it was testified. The husband had defaulted on a contract to pay his wife $85 a month.

Mrs. Lee said that she lost her home at St. Davids and that she was sold out by the Sheriff. She said that she borrowed the money from Mrs. Haven, intending to pay her back.

After Attorney DuBois announced that he had taken this case as a charity affair and had become vitally interested in the case because Mrs. Lee was a highly-educated woman, Judge Keller sentenced the defendant to three months in jail from the time of incarceration on June 1st. There is a detainer against Mrs. Lee lodged by the New Jersey authorities that will be pressed before Mrs. Hartman's release from prison.

Mrs. Haven stated that she had a number of checks given her by Mrs. Lee that were "no good" and that she finally decided that such a character should be punished.

After hearing testimony in the case of Frank Hazen, of Morrisville, charged with desertion and non-support by his wife, Mrs. Jessie Hazen, Judge Keller made no order but directed that the defendant pay the costs.

Both Hazen and his wife had been married before. Most of their troubles, it was testified grew out of "cussing matches." Mrs. Hazen, on the witness stand, stated, "I never knew how to cuss until he taught me," pointing to her husband.

It was also brought out that Mrs. Hazen's first husband left her $10,000 insurance money when he died. She told Judge Keller that she spent considerable of that money caring for the children of Hazen's first wife.

Witnesses called by the Commonwealth included Scott McCauley, a son by first marriage, and Ada Henderson. For the defense, Mary McClaren and Gertrude Hazen Williams were witnesses.

Nicholas Disler, Jr., of Morrisville, was directed by Judge Calvin S. Boyer to pay $5 a week toward the support of his two children. Disler was arrested on the information of his wife, Helen Disler. Mrs. Disler testified that on May 11, this year, her husband hit her across the eyes, "knocking her out completely." Both claimed that on numerous occasions drinking parties occurred at the Disler home and that when they ran out of liquor they would go to Trenton for more, where Disler, according to his wife, often stayed too long.

John S. Whitesell, of Newtown, charged with desertion and non-support of his daughter, was directed to pay $1 a week until September 15 after which the order is to be $2 per week.

HIBERNIANS WIN FIRST HALF HONORS

Defeat Langhorne Colored Giants by Score of 6 to 1

6TH CONSECUTIVE WIN

LOWER BUCKS COUNTY LEAGUE

Results of last night's games

HIBERNIANS, 6; LANGHORNE, 1
ODD FELLOWS, 6; BRISTOL, 2
HULMEVILLE, 5; PARKLAND, 1

The Hibernians were crowned first half champions of the Lower Bucks County League last night on Sullivan's field when they captured their sixth straight victory. The Langhorne Colored Giants were the victims with the score being 6-1.

A bad first inning spoiled the colored team's chances for victory. After two passes and an error had loaded the sacks, Roe singled to score a run and then Gleason cleaned house with a triple over the centerfielder's head. Two more hits and a pass sandwiched between gave the winners their other two tallies.

After that bad first inning, J. Harris was invincible. The Hibs only made two hits the rest of the fray and ten went down via the strike-out method. He did not issue a pass the remainder of the game and in five innings only seventeen batters faced him.

Gene Lawler was the winning hurler, allowing the colored team seven hits, two of which were made by Darrah. Darrah started something in the fifth when he tripped with one out, but he was stranded as two batters failed to connect with the pill.

On Thursday night, the Hibernians will play Bristol A. A. on Sullivan's field.

Hulmeville A. A. took second place honors in the Lower Bucks County League by defeating Parkland A. A., 5-1, on the Hulmeville diamond.

"Jake" Devlin twirled wonderful ball in defeating the Parkland team. He set them down with two hits and both were made by "Eddie" Adams. The only tally from his delivery was the result of a bad throw by "Ike" Watson.

The winners made eight hits off Wilson Holland and most of these were bunched to score the five tallies. On Thursday night, Hulmeville will play the Parkland team at Parkland.

On the Emilie diamond, the Odd Fellows snapped the good playing of the Bristol A. A. team by scoring a 6-2 victory.

Two bad innings, the first and the third, spelled defeat for Johnny Mul-

TELLS STUDENTS HOW TO APPRECIATE LIFE MORE

Dr. Karl DeSchweinitz, Phila., Addresses S. Langhorne Graduates

10 GET CERTIFICATES

SOUTH LANGHORNE, June 21.—An address by Dr. Karl DeSchweinitz, brief message by Principal M. P. Hammond, presentation of diplomas to 10 eighth grade graduates by Assistant County Superintendent C. H. Boehm, as well as numbers by the students, made for an excellent commencement program at South Langhorne Grammar School, last evening.

Dr. DeSchweinitz, who is professor of child care at the University of Pennsylvania, and a well-known social worker, highly complimented the class on its program. He presented the thought that too many people go through life, looking straight ahead, and giving no thought to the wonderful things about them. He told the grammar school graduates they have attained enough knowledge to barely get along on, but admonished that the field of learning is large, and much is to be learned to make life easier and more enjoyable. He told that with advancement in the fields of learning they will come to appreciate more life itself, and the glories about them.

Principal M. P. Hammond presented the ten students for receipt of diplomas. Mr. Hammond told the class of the right and the wrong way of life, and gave the recipe for each, advising

NON-STOP HOP TO ROME WILL BE FIRST LEG OF TWO-WAY OCEAN FLIGHT, PLANNED BY WILLIAMS; NEW YORK TO ROME, THEN BACK TO CHICAGO

Plans to Carry Pay Load of Air Mail and Merchandise

MAY BLAZE A TRAIL

Maps Out Definite Schedule; 27 Days for 10,500-Mile Jaunt

NEW YORK, June 21.—(INS)—Roger Q. Williams, the veteran trans-oceanic flier who plans a two-way crossing of the Atlantic this summer in a flight from New York to Chicago via Rome, Athens and Dublin, plans to carry a pay load of air mail and merchandise when he takes off July 24 on the first leg of the project, a 3,400-mile non-stop hop to Rome. His specially built airbus, The Flying Southpaw, will have a compartment holding 1,000 pounds of cargo.

Williams, who may be blazing an express air trail to European capitals, will make a scientific survey of the northern and southern air lanes in his coming expedition. Equipped with every modern engine and navigation instrument, The Flying Southpaw will have weather recording devices installed in her cabin to keep accurate account of conditions along both routes.

The trans-Atlantic air line of the future must be an express service, running on a definite time schedule the year around, Williams said, in order to be able to compete with the fast and luxurious modern day steamships. The feasibility of such service, he contends, rests entirely upon the INDUSTRY IS NOW VIRTUALLY ON WAR FOOTING IN U. S.

General Hugh S. Johnson Is In Supreme Command of Industry in U. S.

WORKING 24 HRS. DAILY

Expect Several Million Men Back To Work This Summer

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 21.—(INS)—American industry was virtually on a war footing today with major industries of the country working 24 hours a day, with General Hugh S. Johnson administrator of national recovery.

"The principal industrial groups of the country know just what we are facing," he said.

"They are working night and day and several of these industries are almost ready to submit their codes."

"We are making a sort of tour-de-force for the next three months," General Johnson revealed.

"We are going to try to get our earnings somewhere back where they belong during that time."

To do this he proposes:

"To put several million men back to work this summer."

"To appeal to manufacturers for an armistice in increased production capacity until we get this upward spiral started."

"To balance prices and wages."

The next three months will see the emergency phase of the job, in Johnson's opinion.

His main idea in this line is to get men back on the job at, he states emphatically, a "living wage."

It is no secret that he is relying on the "big fellows" to set the pace for the smaller groups in maintaining wage levels and in meeting his requirements and those set forth by President Roosevelt's statement of his aim.

Back of that is the most powerful war-time weapon of all—public opinion. It is almost an open secret that public opinion will be mobilized as it was in war to insure nation-wide industrial co-operation. Those that come in, Johnson promises in pungent terms, will be protected against minority of "industrial slackers" or "chiselers."

Two Young Men Hurt When Car Overturns Early Today

An automobile turning over several times after striking a pile of stone, early this morning, caused injuries to two of the trio of young men riding therein. The three were thrown from the machine.

The injured: Franklin Silber, Jefferson avenue, driver of the coupe, severe laceration and contusions of the left hand, also cut tendon, requiring eight stitches; John Passanante, Pond street, injury to head. The two remained overnight in Harriman Hospital, to which institution they were taken by a passerby. The third young man, Louis Harris, Jefferson avenue, was unhurt.

The accident is said to have occurred when the car struck a pile of stone near Paterson Parchment Paper plant, as the group were enroute to Tullytown.

CONFERENCE AWAITS U. S.

Geological Museum, London, Eng., June 21.—The World Economic Conference wallowed in a sea of uncertainty and indecision today with everybody pointing an accusing finger at the United States as the cause of it all. Inability of the Americans here to discuss debts for temporary stabilization of the dollar, which are the only two subjects in which Europe is immediately interested, has made America the "villain" of the drama in the fast fading hopes for the conference, in the opinion of the other delegates.

There is discussion in some quarters of the advisability of recessing the parley until the situation clears up, but it is understood this proposal has not passed the stage of informal discussion.

The French are standing firm on their thesis that no agreement on tariff and other agenda subjects are possible until the dollar and the pound are stabilized. Adjournment talk however, is largely ascribed as one means of bringing pressure on America to hurry stabilization. If so, it has failed for the Americans have definite instructions to leave stabilization strictly to Washington.

In the meantime the position of the American delegation in London is anything but comfortable. Subjected to a barrage of criticism and ridicule in the London and European press because of their inability to negotiate what Europe insists shall be negotiated, and confronted with obvious disunion in their own ranks, their position is embarrassing to say the least.

However, they do not seem to mind it. Secretary of State Hull remains serenely unruffled, no matter how much the other Americans are chafing.

ROOSEVELT BOUND FOR PORTLAND

He did not dock in this quaint old fishing town until 11 p. m., and when the "Amberjack 2nd," finally dropped anchor she had a run of more than 100 miles behind her in a single day.

Graduates Take Gathering On Imaginary Tour of Building

EXPLAIN DEPARTMENTS

Amplifiers Used for First Time At Commencement Here

An excellent presentation of a vitalized commencement was made by the June Class of 1933, Bristol High School, last evening, when members of the graduating class interpreted the departments of the school.

With the idea in mind of giving the public at large a keener sense of the functions and varied accomplishments at the high school building, the graduates and members of the Glee Club joined forces last evening. Amplifiers were used for the first time during a commencement program, here, affording all persons in the crowded auditorium an opportunity to hear every part of the program.

In an imaginary tour of the high school building those who have just completed their high school work here showed clearly how Bristol students are trained for citizenship. Ralph Cahall was in charge of the imaginative tour, with other graduates explaining the uses of the several rooms, and told of the clubs, departments, etc.

This project, together with awarding of diplomas, the Grundy medal, and prizes donated by Mothers' and Fathers' Association were high lights of the program. The graduates totaled 59.

The Grundy medal, presented to the graduate having the highest average during the four years in high school, was received by Eleanor Faber, whose average for the four years was over 90. This, as well as the diplomas, were presented by Doron Green, president of the board of directors. The graduates were recommended to Mr. Green by Principal Warren P. Snyder, and the diplomas were then bestowed.

Prizes awarded by the Mothers' Association were presented on behalf of that organization by Mrs. Harry Pope. These included:

Five dollars to pupil in seventh grade who was judged the best penman, winner, Theda VanSclver; $2.50 to pupil in junior high school showing greatest improvement in shop work, Irwin Bramly; $2.50 to girl in junior high whose sewing is considered the best, winner, Dorothy Abrams; three prizes of $5 each to pupils securing highest scores in standardized tests covering all the work taught in—mathematics, Eleanor Faber; commercial work, Francis Hampton; language, Elinor Finney. The Mothers' Association also bestowed a prize this year for the best essay written under prescribed rules. The winner, Louise Descamps, who received the $10 award on Class Night, read her essay last evening.

Fathers' Association prizes were awarded as follows by Dr. Frank Lehman: Five dollars to girl of senior class whose work in sewing has been considered the most outstanding, winner, Margaret Quinn; $5 to senior whose work in art showed greatest amount of originality, together with good technique, Elwyn Neitzel; $5 to senior who has displayed best leadership in any major extra-curricular activities, athletics not included, recipient, Pompeo Piazza (traffic club); $5 to boy in senior class whose all-around activity in athletics has been of greatest help to school during last four years, Peter Bornice; watch to boy having highest average in senior year, winner, Elwyn Neitzel; a tie existing among the girls' group, watches were presented to both Eleanor Faber and Elinor Finney, who had highest averages during their senior year.

The glee club took a prominent part in the program of the evening, and favorable comments were heard on all sides as to the manner of their presentations. The numbers included: "Praise Ye the Lord," Polish song; "Heave-Ho, My Laddie," English song; "Volga Boat Song," Russian song; "Listen To the Lambs" (Dett); "Summer Winds Blow" (Strauss).

The invocation by the Rev. Howard L. Zepp, followed the procession.

WAR ON INSECT PESTS

To fool the hen and to persuade the workers wrought by electricity. An artificial dawn wakes the hen, sets her to pecking earlier than the sunrise, and more food in her gizzard means more eggs for the poultryman. Electrically lighted greenhouses are used to force plants to a quicker, richer blooming than natural light would give.

Now the insect world is to be fought up, to the destruction of some of the pests that infest orchards, fields and gardens. Many a clumsy moth has gone to its death in the flame of a lamp or candle, but never before has wholesale killing been planned through such means. Such creatures are most readily attacked, not in the winged stage, but in the cocoon or as larvae. To catch them on the wing will be a triumph for science. A method has been evolved.

Electric light traps will be placed in the orchards to lure the female moth before she lays her eggs in the heart of the apple blossoms. Success will depend to some extent on the time of day when she emerges from her cocoon and the length of time that elapses between her birth and her egg-laying. If she does not come out in the full light of day and is attracted by the incandescent traps, her fate and that of her innumerable progeny is sealed.

Electrocution may halt the destructive march westward of the Japanese beetle which has already crossed New Jersey and is now concentrating its front ranks in western Pennsylvania. A plan is under consideration to place a chemical, known to attract this voracious insect, in large electrified cages where it concentrates.

Eventually moths, mosquitoes and other harmful insects will be exterminated by devices of man's invention and the farmer's lot will be easier and life will lose some of its little annoyances.

SMALL GIFTS WELCOME

The widespread effects of the depression and its disastrous consequences to large fortunes are reflected in the appeal by President Butler of Columbia university for small contributions to the latter.

Columbia heretofore has not felt it necessary to seek small gifts. It has been a particularly favored institution financially, with large contributions to its endowment fund being regularly recorded. But a change in this situation is seen by Dr. Butler.

"The great fortunes and the large accumulations which make these benefactions possible are either dissipated or destroyed," he said. "The economic and financial crisis which grips the whole world has made their return quite impossible, certainly for a long time to come, if not forever."

Other privately-endowed institutions have or will find themselves in the same situation.

Enough money is the exact sum required to win respect without arousing envy.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED SO FAR.

Joan Hastings and her sweetheart, Bill Martin, are separated when her stern aunt, Evvie Van Fleet, learns of the romance and sends Joan away to school without seeing Bill. Enroute from her home in Sausalito, California to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Joan slips off the train and goes back to Bill's home only to learn that he had left town. Unknown to Joan, Bill had gone to see her and learned from Evvie that she had gone away. Evvie upbraided Bill, saying that if he really loved her he would not try to find her as he had nothing to offer Joan. So he left home to make good. Unable to return to her aunt's home, Joan goes to San Francisco. She lives with good-natured Mrs. Maisie Kimmer, whose daughter, Francine, gives Joan a position modeling in her exclusive Maison Francine. Wealthy Curtis Barstow falls in love with Joan but her heart is still with Bill though she believes he no longer cares. Lyla Barstow disapproves of her son's interest in Joan. Bill is befriended by Rollo Keyes, wealthy playboy, whose father gives Bill a position. He learns surveying and is well on the road to success. Unable to stay away any longer, Bill returns home to try and find Joan. He learns Joan's whereabouts and waits outside Francine's shop for her. Joan turns white at the sight of him, but holds herself aloof. Hurt at her attitude, Bill apologizes for upsetting her and leaves. Months later, Ruth Gillespie, asks Joan to make a foursome with Rollo Keyes, Ruth's fiancé, and his friend. Ruth confides in Joan that she is really in love with Rollo's friend, who turns out to be Bill. When he has a moment alone with Joan, Bill asks "Are you happy with Curtis—please tell me the truth!"

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER XXVIII

For a moment, the smallest fleeting moment, it seemed that it was the old Bill asking.

"Are you happy with him, Joan?" The hotel corridor blurred and faded. They were back in the old garden, with the moon struggling painfully through the trees. A boy and a girl, alone.

Her knees wobbled, her heart beat crazily against her side. "Do you care that I am? Does it mean anything to you—now?" But the words that trembled on her lips were never said. Rollo and Ruth were back, looking for them. The ghostly garden melted away.

"Hiding out on us, you fakers! Of all the nerve. Come on back—I never saw such a girl!" Ruth was laughing, a little too loud and shrill. "Are you, Joan?" he asked again. But the little moment of magic had passed, would never come back again.

"Is she, what?" Ruth mimicked, taking his arm.

"Am I happy, he's asking!" Joan cried, and threw back her head, laughing too. Her eyes were on Bill, the new Bill again, with the glittering Ruth clinging to his arm. "Don't I look it! Don't I?"

"But where did you meet him?" Ruth persisted.

"Oh, a long time ago, at school." "Sweethearts, I suppose."

Joan shrugged. Went on basting the soft silken stuff in her lap.

Ruth got up and closed the door. They were in the workroom alone. "Going to try and get him back?"

"Of course not—don't be silly. It wasn't anything, really."

"No? You both get cold chills and nearly pass out of the picture when you meet. It's remembering the old spelling of matches you used to attend together, for instance. It would be. Will you is just the kind of soft egg that would cry at the thought of the little old red school house, I don't think."

"Will you please get out and let me work?" Joan's eyes flashed furiously. "I'm sick to death of the whole evening. And I'm sick of hearing about it now that it's over. Next time, you want—"

Ruth burst into tears. Her voice, when she spoke, was strangled. "I know I'm a fool, a jealous fool. I ought to be hard-boiled, heaven knows, with two divorcees and everything, but I've got that soft streak in me, always falling for somebody like a ton of bricks. . . . and with Willum and me it was love at first sight. I was going with Rollo, and all set for the wedding, and I met Willum. . . . I can't explain it, but it was different from any time before. . . . we were sort of made for each other. . . . different. . . .

"All right—but don't talk about it. Please!"

"But he was so cold when he kissed me goodbye," Ruth sobbed. "Not a bit like himself. I hardly slept a wink all night. So I thought—"

"Joan closed her eyes. "Please—please don't talk about it—"

"All right, I won't. But Joan, if you could have seen how cold he was when he kissed me. I nearly cried. I thought I'd ask you. I'm not like some girls. I always play straight with another girl. You— you aren't double-crossing me, Joan Hastings? You wouldn't tell me—"

"No—no!"

"Because you know how men are, you can't trust them. Much as I love Bill, I wouldn't believe a word he said on a stack of Bibles, you can't, you know. And any friend of Rollo's steps high wide and handsome, you can bet on that. So I thought—"

She saw Joan's face, greenish in the half light. "Joan—there's no use in you and I falling out over him. You saw him first, and now there will be others—I'm not fool enough to forget that, and don't you be. So—"

"Ruth!" Joan almost screamed. "I'm telling you the truth. I was never so sick and disgusted with anyone in my whole life as I am with Bill Martin. I'm sick of looking at him, and sick of hearing about him. Now, for heaven's sake—stop!"

"Oh—if that's the way you feel about it," Ruth took out her vanity box, began to repair her ravaged complexion. "Good night! Will you look how my eyelashes have run!"

Lyla Barstow read her son's letter again. It was like Curtis to write, instead of talk. If he had spoken of it before he left she could have found some good excuse. Some reason why it would not be convenient to have Joan to dinner or tea. But when he wrote from Seattle, and especially asked her, as a favor. . . . what could she do?

Sighing, she went to the telephone. Called the Maison Francine. Asked for Joan.

Joan didn't want to come, but she did.

Mrs. Barstow was in a gracious mood. She studied the girl's clear cut, lovely features while she pulled her with faded muffles and small talk. Noted the absence of make-up. The slender well-cared-for hands. Perhaps. . . . just perhaps. . . . Curtis wasn't far wrong. . . . So many of the girls were poor and ordinary these days, even from the nicest families.

"I had the pleasantest day yesterday," she said, making conversation. "With old, old friends, in the sweetest, most old-fashioned house. You would have enjoyed seeing it. I'm sure, you like old-fashioned things so. And such a garden! Even in winter."

"Where was it?" Joan asked politely.

"Oh, the old Horace Gray place, over in Sausalito."

"The Gray's. Why that's right below our house!" Joan cried. And could have bitten off her tongue.

"Indeed!" Mrs. Barstow said. "Indeed!" Her mind went racing back to Sausalito. . . . now what sort of place was above the Gray's? Were there any shacks. . . . or did she remember rightly. . . . just two or three big, old places out that way.

Desperately Joan jumped to her feet. "Mrs. Barstow, may I have more tea? I'm so thirsty. Scandalous appetite! We worked awfully hard to-day. Francine is designing four stage costumes for Gilda Bronson, the star in that new play at the—"

"Really? Have another muffin, dear. Marmalade? Now let me see, the Hastings house in Sausalito. Do I remember it? I know Sausalito quite well. Lottie Gray and I are such old friends. Just where is your house—above the Grays, did you say?"

Joan smiled. "Yes, you probably never noticed it—it's rather off by itself."

And she blushed as she thought of the yellow turrets, that everyone knew for miles.

"Hastings. . . . did I know any Hastings?" (Were they people the kind I'd know?)

"They did when I was a baby," Joan said. She had to say something.

"Oh—but who brought you up, my dear?"

"My aunts."

"And their name was?" the inquisition went on.

"Van Fleet!" Joan cried, explosively. "What did she care? What was there left to worry about? The Sedgewicks had found out where she was, and nothing happened. They must have told Aunt Evvie and Aunt Babe. What could Mrs. Barstow do?"

"Van Fleet!" that lady echoed. "Why, of course, I know the old Van Fleet mansion. . . . why did you never tell me? And you must be one of the grandchildren. How interesting!" She moved her chair a bit nearer Joan's. Poured herself another cup of tea. "Spend the evening with me," she begged. "It has been so long since we've had a real visit." Her delicate white hand stroked Joan's.

The last barrier was down.

"And did you see the Russian ballet this season? We must go to some of the Symphonies together," Mrs. Barstow chattered on.

The new book by Christopher Morley. The dreadful time they were having in China.

Joan answered vaguely. They were both thinking about Curtis, being sweet to each other, for his sake. . . .

Maisie hardly left the flat the two weeks Curtis was away. "I never knew when there's going to be a special delivery letter or a telegram or something," she explained to Miss Harvey. "I never see such a fellow for sendin' things. Will you look at these Irish Elegants, in November? An' yesterday it was these here chocolates. . . . have one. Joan won't care. . . . an' just look at that box, will you? I tell her we'll have to save it, it's too good to throw away. . . ."

And every night when Joan came home there was the thrill of wondering what he had sent. Like Christmas every day.

She loved his letters, too. Warm, friendly, brief little letters, written in his square, heavy hand. Full of subtle humor, and something else, something you could feel, something that seemed to beat through the words in a sort of rhythm. . . . "I love you. . . . I love you."

"But, of course, he doesn't—really!"

Her eyes brightened, her color deepened, she held her fair head proudly. Other men might forget, but not Curtis. "He's like the Rock of Gibraltar!" she told Maisie in one of her rare confidences.

And then—before she had had half enough of the letters, before she was really ready to see him again, he was back. Meeting her after work in the roadster, driving her home, searching her face with his smiling light brown eyes, laughing as he asked, "Have you been true to me while I've been gone? Have you?"

So nice to have him back again, so nice. . . . and yet. . . . and yet. . . . she brushed the bright hair angrily back from her forehead. . . . what was the matter with her? What wasn't she happier?

Ruth was happy. She yawned to work in the morning always a few minutes late. Whispered in corners with Maudie Murphy. Long, intimate conversations. . . . "He said. . . . I give you my word I didn't get to bed till half past five. . . . the most wonderful dancer. . . . breakfast at the bench. . . . Heard their long, stifled peals of shaking laughter. Knew they were talking about Bill."

In the long, quiet nights, when the house was dark and even the cat's ears had stopped running, Joan lay in bed feverishly tossing, thinking about Ruth and Bill, and Curtis. Trying to thrill to the memory of Curtis's kiss. . . . longing. . . . crying for Bill. . . .

And then, when she was really beginning to forget, when she could hear his name without quivering, and see him with Ruth, without wanting to cover her face with her hands, when she was learning to find comfort in Curtis. . . . then Bill came back.

"As Advertised"

Advertising is like placing a business under a microscope. The store-keeper invites the people into his place of business with an advertisement. He pays good money to interest you in his merchandise, knowing full well that if he can get you to come to his store and try the advertised items, it is more than likely that you will become a regular customer.

It takes courage to advertise. The store-keeper, who does not advertise, has to use tricks to get customers into his store. Window signs featuring "Tremendous values," etc., are used to catch the unwary.

The HOME TOWN LEAGUE store is a regularly advertised store. The fact that it is regularly advertised is an indication to you, that they are pretty good people to do business with.

Look for the red and blue HOME TOWN LEAGUE emblem on the store windows.

DO YOU KNOW THAT... Councilmen Frank Pfeiffer and Edgar Spencer, also Dr. H. Doyle Webb and Louis Spring are enthusiastic fishermen? They spend their spare time in the trout streams in Pike and Monroe counties frequently.

"Bill" Fine, Wood street, is pitching good ball with Ogdensburg, N. Y., in the Canadian League. He is a team mate of Larry David, formerly of the Sixth Ward. Fine won three games and lost one so far.

George McEuen has organized a quoit team at the Elks Club where two quoit pits have been laid on the lawn in the rear of the home on Radcliffe street.

County Commissioner John S. Roberts spends his week-ends fishing in Barnegat Bay when the opportunity presents itself. Mr. Roberts owns a raised cabin cruiser at Beach Haven, N. J. Another devotee of Isaac Walton is H. O. "Bud" Brunner, of Mill street. Mr. Brunner has a fine 38 foot auxiliary sloop on the Delaware river in which he spends many pleasant hours at his favorite pastime.

Seen on the Elks tennis courts the other afternoon... Dr. J. Fred Wagner, Dave Landreth, Les Thorne and Sam Pearson in a hot doubles match... and does this quartet argue? You should see them in action some time.

Dr. and Mrs. George Hussey have purchased a big Irish gelding from Mrs. A. Boice of Princeton, N. J., and are training their horse for exhibition in the jumping events at some of the fall horse shows.

Why not have a charge account for cash?

$ 25 — 48 cents

not depend so much on a large police force. He infused into his talk accounts of his experiences while traveling in Russia.

The graduates are: Edwin Campbell, Arthur Blittie, Thomas Bowers, Jane Bentley; Virginia Steele, valetictorian; Marie Blittie, Virginia Rector, Rose Simonangeli, Rita Seifert, Donald Horn.

Music was provided by the South Langhorne school orchestra and the school chorus.

A garden effect was presented in the arrangement of flowers, greens, trellises and arbors, this forming an attractive background for the graduates. The school is surrounded by flowers and school tributes, and the trellises blossomed with rambling roses. There was a profusion of ferns making for natural beauty. The class motto, "Is It Worth While", in blue and white, had a prominent place on the platform, while to the side of the group were drawings of familiar schoolroom objects.

CONFERENCE AWAITS MOLEY

London, England, June 21.—Despite the welter of popular criticism, diplomatic, government and world economic conference leaders looked to President Roosevelt today to save the parley from failure. Special attention focused on the impending arrival here of the American assistant secretary of state, Raymond Moley, member of President Roosevelt's "brain trust" and the message he will bear to the chief executive of the United States.

Despite sneers in the British press, his arrival here is regarded in many quarters as marking the turning point of the conference. The moment he lands in London, Moley will find himself face to face with a huge European question mark. In proof of this, and the significance many quarters attach to his coming, almost every European delegation scoffs at the contention of the Americans, that Moley is merely President Roosevelt's messenger to them. On all sides declarations are raised that the fate of the conference depends upon what Moley will have to say for the United States regarding tariffs, currency stabilization and a general economic policy.

Will Ross Take Tony's Title?

By BURNLEY

Barney ROSS

of Chicago -- SPEEDY AND AGGRESSIVE, WITH A GREAT LEFT HOOK -- WILL HE TAKE CANZONERI'S TITLE WHEN THEY CLASH?

THE CHAMP IS EXPECTED TO CONCENTRATE ON BARNEYS SLIM MID SECTION --

CANZONERI'S BATTLE-SCARRED FACE CUTS VERY EASILY --

-- A BIG HANDICAP AGAINST A SHARP-SHOOTER LIKE ROSS!

ONE of the most thrilling lightweight championship battles in years is expected to take place when champion Tony Canzoneri defends his crown against the sensational Chicagoan, Barney Ross.

On paper this scrap figures to be a toss, and I don't see how it can miss being a really great fight. Canzoneri always fights. He is a lion-hearted, two-fisted brawler, who has never been known to back away from an exchange of blows.

Barney Ross is an aggressive, whirlwind type of fighter, and he and Tony should furnish lots of fireworks when they clash.

that time are causing many smart fight critics to lean to Ross in the coming battle.
